

How Music at Huntcliff School prepares students for life in modern Britain

Music has spiritual powers

No-one really knows where music came from, but there are many theories that suggest music predates the existence of mankind.

Some of the earliest recorded moments in music took place in medieval times with choral pieces for church prayers.

Even today, many people claim that music is the key to a holy, more fulfilling life.

Music brings people together

Everyone can understand it and feel something if they open themselves up.

There is a certain type of connection that comes when you make music in a group.

Playing music with other musicians is an incredible feeling.

It is a level of communication and copying each other that create the connection.

Music makes education more enjoyable

Music can be very engaging in the classroom and is a great tool for memorization.

Music teachers use self discipline and time management skills that you cannot get anywhere else.

Music is the language of the universe

Music is universal in that there are no boundaries to understanding music.

Even animals like birds, dogs and whales can understand music to a certain degree.

Music can create a mood and make you feel emotion

Music can whisk you away on an extended journey. Music can make time feel frozen. Music also has the power to suggest movement.

Music is the key to creativity

A creative mind has the ability to make discoveries and create innovations.

In the same sense, playing a musical instrument gives you the ability to tell a story without words.

Listening to music challenges you to listen and tell a story about what you hear.

Both require maximum right brain usage which not only exercises creativity, but also intellect.
